Inherent Dangers

As with any sport there are certain dangers associated with participation in it. Please be aware that your child will be swimming in the ocean where there is the possibility of danger that is uncontrollable by the supervisors. Some of the dangers you need to be aware of are:

1. Rip tides that may take the swimmer away from the shore causing panic, exhaustion, and in some instance drowning.
  2. Large surf that makes swimming in those conditions dangerous due to the impact of waves and a limited ability to control ones immediate environment.
  3. Hidden sandbars that can cause injury if a person dives into one accidentally or hits one while surfing.
  4. Sea life such as stingrays or jellyfish that can cause a painful wound.
  5. Sea life such as stingrays or jellyfish can cause a painful wound. The possibility of attach by shark causing severe injury or death exists. Injuries from other people and their swimming or surfing equipment can occur. Hard surfboards can cause severe head and body injuries and other associated trauma to the body.
  6. Other injuries can occur from running on the sand or failure to properly warm-up prior to heavy exercise.
